

Codes of Practice

for Social Service Workers and Employers

Revised 2016

About the Codes

We first published the Codes in 2003, setting out the national standards of conduct and practice that apply to all social service workers. The 2016 revised Codes is the second edition and takes account of developments in social services policy and practice.

Introduction

The Scottish Social Services Council (SSSC) Codes of Practice (the Codes) set out:

- the standards of practice and behaviour expected of everyone who works in social services in Scotland
- the standards expected of employers of social service workers in Scotland.

In setting out these standards, the Codes are a tool for employers and for workers to use to think about how they can continually improve their practice. The Codes let people who use social services and carers know what they can expect from the workers who support them.

The Codes are in two parts

The two Codes are presented together because they are complementary and mirror the joint responsibilities of both employers and workers in meeting the standards.

1. Code for Employers of Social Service Workers

If you are an employer, the Code for Employers of Social Service Workers sets out your responsibilities for making sure your workforce is trusted, skilled and confident. You have a responsibility to support your workers to achieve the standards set out in the Code for Social Service Workers and should use both parts of the Codes as a tool for continuous improvement.

2. Code for Social Service Workers

If you work in social services, the Code for Social Service Workers sets out clear standards that you are expected to meet. It is your responsibility to meet these standards and you should use the Code to reflect on your practice and identify how you can continually improve.

Why are the Codes important?

Public protection and regulating the workforce

The Codes, along with the Health and Social Care Standards, are an important part of regulating and improving the quality of care experienced by people using social services.

All employers and workers must make a commitment to work in line with the Codes of Practice.

The SSSC regulates the workforce and aims to make sure that the people of Scotland can count on social services being provided by a trusted, skilled and confident workforce.

The Care Inspectorate regulates organisations which employ workers and provide registered care services. The Care Inspectorate also provides advice and promotes good practice to improve standards across the social service sector.

When a registered worker or employer does not meet the expectations set out in the Codes, action may be taken by the SSSC (for workers), or by the Care Inspectorate (for employers). The SSSC can take action against workers through our fitness to practise process. The Care Inspectorate gives advice to care service providers on following the Codes and, if necessary, can take action against employers.

Supporting good practice every day

The Codes are a tool for continuous improvement and improving practice. For example you can use them:

- to support regular Codes discussions at team meetings
- during induction and for staff learning and development
- to reflect on current practice.
